Have you ever driven by an abortion clinic and noticed people standing in front praying? What was your reaction? Curiosity? Approval? Discomfort?

It is understandable that some who remember the divisive days of violent clashes in front of abortion clinics may at first be uncomfortable with any public demonstration, however peaceful, at sites where abortions take place. However, attitudes have changed, and “comfort zones” around public witness against abortion have expanded, thanks in part to an annual, nationwide campaign known as 40 Days for Life that is helping to transform hearts and minds about abortion.

40 Days for Life adopts a 3-pronged approach of prayer and fasting, community outreach, and a constant, peaceful vigil at abortion clinic sites over a span of 40 days, a timeframe chosen deliberately because it is one “God uses consistently throughout salvation history to transform His people,” according to the organization’s website. Discomfort has given way to acceptance and even approval as the sight becomes more commonplace and as more and more people — especially young people — join the ranks of those at prayer.

Why do they do it? “It saves lives,” say leaders, who affirm that prayer and public witness often help change the minds of women scheduled to have abortions. Beyond that, it helps normalize and promote “pro-life” as a mainstream ideology supported by men, women and children of all ages.

40 Days for Life was the brainchild of a small group of Texans who began the first 40-day vigil in 2004. By 2007, they had expanded to become a national campaign spanning 89 cities in 33 states. They have grown to include hosts in all 50 states and dozens of countries across six continents. 40 Days for Life came to Vermont in 2009, and has continued every autumn since then in the Burlington area, expanding to include a host site in Rutland last year.

Again this year, Catholics are expected to form the largest block of supporters of the 2017 40 Days for Life Campaign in Vermont. Individual participants and service groups are encouraged to sign up online to participate in one or more vigil hours of prayer at one of the host sites. 40 Days organizers say they will provide mentor help for groups or individuals signing up for the first time, and that those who register on the website will receive an email reminder and an outline of guidelines in advance. 2017 BISHOP'S ANNUAL APPEAL REPORT

The September issue of Vermont Catholic Magazine will herald the start of a new distribution system. All who have donated $24 or more to the 2017 Bishop's Annual Appeal will receive a copy of the magazine delivered to their home address. Each parish will receive a bulk mailing of magazines to be available for those who have not donated to the appeal. Watch for these and share them with family and friends, especially those who cannot get to the church. For those parishes still using the communication envelopes, these funds will help pay for the copies your friends and neighbors may not be able to afford. Ask your pastor if you cannot find the magazine in your parish.
